The existing social order must facilitate and support the development of individual otherwise the individual has the right and duty to revolt and cut new paths himself but it is in keeping in view of social ends and not merely individual ends. Individuals must work towards perfection in a spiritual society with the principles of love, non-violence, truth and justice. A social order based upon the above virtues, removes all sorts of exploitation i.e., economic, social, political and even religious. Exploitation affects dignity of human beings; therefore, concentration of power, social position or worldly goods in the hands of the few must be discouraged and addressed. Gandhiji's idea on caste system is not what the present day society practises. What he meant was division of labor and specialization of functions according to individual nature and expertise. Gandhiji's concentrated on a casteless and classless society based upon cooperative service.
